SENIORS HEAR BACCALAUREATE

REV. BAUGHN PREACHES IMPRESSIVE SERMON.

The class of 1924 was privileged to listen to a very impressive baccalaureate sermon, Sunday evening at the School auditorium, by Rev. J. Herman Baughn of the M. E. church.

Rev. Baughn took for his text Matthew 6:33—"Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you." He said in part as follows:

You have reached an end that marks another beginning. Each succeeding success ought to set a new goal. Each defeat in life should afford an opportunity for a new start.

You have finished only a part of your course. You have many things yet to learn. Even if you knew all and stopped now you would be referred to in ten years as an old, 1924 model.

I congratulate you on having finished the prescribed course of study and are now about to pass out of the school of the state into the school of life,—out of the barracks into the line of battle,—out of the theoretical into the practical.

In planning for your future you have considered at least these three questions:

1. "What will I do with my life?"
2. "Why will I do the thing I will do with it?"
3. "How will I do the thing I want to do with it?"

In choosing your life task I would have you remember that the next decade will mean an unprecedented period of prosperity for you. It will mean more to you than it will to any other class of people. It will open new opportunities and privileges.

I am not here to tell you what calling, vocation or occupation you should select for these will merely be the ways you will express what you already have done.

But as you choose your vocation in life remember the words of Jesus: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you."

Let me answer this question you have asked yourself, "What shall I do with my life? If you are to do anything worth while in the world you must develop your soul. You must elect a course in soul-development using the bible as your text-book.

Under the second question, "The motive for doing," Rev. Baughn said there were three grades of achievement that were measured by the motives that actuate life:

- (1) The achievement due to the call of money.
- (2) The achievement due to the call of ambition.
- (3) The achievement due to the call of service.

The first two have long been discredited as legitimate motives for achievement. One should constantly endeavor to be a success but the world's idea of what constitutes success is changing continually.

In seeking the answer to the second question let me urge you to develop your soul life in order that you may be better fitted to serve the present age, your calling to fulfill. Question Three, "How is all this to be accomplished?" The secret of the answer to this question is the willingness to learn. For life demands a student and not a graduate. Life has no use for graduates in its schema of events.

I would have you remember that C-o-m-m-e-n-s-e-n-s-e does not spell "Finished". All too many look upon their graduation day as the finish of their education.

So this is not the end of your education but the matriculation into the school of experience. In this day of extremes the spiritual has a hard time of getting its place in the scheme of events. Occasionally our daily papers get in an editorial of a religious nature, but if they were to leave off printing the seamy side of life they would go bankrupt mighty quick. I say this because much of your education will be gleaned from the daily press from now on. The daily newspaper is a fair indicator of the views of the people and they show how much the average man's views are out of proportion with life. Young man! Young woman! Never discount the value of the Spiritual.

The greatest pulling power—the greatest influence in America is the little red school house and the church in the valley by the wildwood. You will not all be presidents, although I suspect you would rather I had not told you that, neither will you all become rich or famous, but the highest estate is open to you—a true personality, a character, four-square.

Rev. Baughn illustrated his address by reciting many instances and experiences of others, thus adding much interest and impressiveness. The platform was nicely decorated with apple blossoms and wild flowers and looked very pretty. A ladies' choir and three musical numbers added greatly to the pleasantness of the occasion. There was a delightful duet by Mrs. Roy Milnes and Mrs. Harold Jarmin, a beautiful solo rendered by Mrs. Charles Gothro and a violin solo by Herman Hanson. Mrs. B. E. Smith accompanied on the piano for each.

DOGS DOING DAMAGE IN GAR-DENS.

Complaints are coming to this office that dogs are destroying gardens and property about the yards and homes. One gentleman from the south side says that his yard is pestered every day by dogs running into his garden and wallowing about. Dog owners are responsible for any damage done and at large, they must expect to pay for any damage they may do.

WOLFF HOME ROBBED OF $20,000 GEMS

From Chicago Saturday Evening Post, Saturday, June 7, 1924.

Burglars broke into two Gold Coast homes late last night and looted them of jewelry and wearing apparel valued at upward of $20,000.

As a result extra police probably will be assigned to protect the fashionable district against future marauders.

The homes visited by the thieves were those of Herbert W. Wolff, 1317 Ritchie court, vice president of the American Car and Foundry company, and Ralph Otis, 1352 Astor street, real estate operator.

From the Wolff residence intruders stole diamonds and other valuable stones and jewelry estimated at approximately $20,000. From the Otis apartment the loot was not determined but was believed to run above $10,000.

The first burglary was discovered by Mrs. Wolff when she and her daughter, Marjorie, returned from the Ambassador hotel. Discovering one room in a disarranged condition, Mrs. Wolff became alarmed, thinking the robbers were still in the house. She called Niels Jensen, private watchman.

The burglars evidently had been in the house but a short time as only two rooms had been visited. The largest haul was made in Mrs. Wolff's room, where a jewelry box containing $10,000 worth of valuables was rifled.

PHYSICAL TRAINING DEMONSTRATION

SCHOOL CLASSES RENDER PUBLIC PROGRAM.

The classes in physical training that have been under direction of Miss Margaret Curtis during the past year, gave a very interesting public demonstration last week Friday evening at the school gymnasium. This was followed by an exhibit of needle work by the classes. In domestic science, under the direction of Miss Ethel Sprague. Both were very excellent and reflect great credit upon these two teachers.

There were ten individual numbers on the physical demonstration program and each was carried out like clock work. The folk dances, relay races and story plays by the little tots of the 2nd, 3rd and 4th grades were delightful. The wand drill and free drill exercises by the pupils of the 4th, 5th and sixth grades were nicely executed. An esthetic dance by the Misses Margrethe and Ella Hanson was as usual very graceful and pleasing.

The indoor basketball game between the Junior and Senior high school girls made a great hit. They played two innings, the Juniors winning 3 to 1. And the clown clog by Junior and Senior girls took the audience by storm. Hi Henry, Lew Dockstetter or any of the great minstrel lights would have been proud to have had this number on their program. They had to respond to an encore.

The program was closed with a May pole by girls from the grades, which was very prettily done.

Sewing Exhibit.
An exhibit by the young ladies of Miss Sprague's sewing classes presented an exhibit of the work they had learned to do during the school year. There were many nicely made dresses and all kinds of white goods and embroidery work. It was quite an eye-opener to those who were not familiar with the work of this department, to learn of the practical things that are being taught to our girls in this department, and to see such excellent examples of dressmaking and other sewing.

Feed Trustees and Faculty.
Of course it would have been difficult for the cooking classes of the domestic science department to have given a public demonstration of their work, however they took pleasure in inviting the school board and their wives and the school faculty to dine with them Friday night at 6 o'clock. About thirty sat down to a meal that was cooked and served by the young ladies, and those who were there were delightfully pleased. In this work too, Miss Sprague has done excellent work, and we are pleased to say will return next year.

VACCINATION RUMORS.

Dr. DeKliene, Saginaw City Health Officer has the following to say about vaccination:

Every now and then a report is circulated about someone dying as a result of vaccination. People responsible for starting such reports are usually chronic rumor-mongers. They are not competent to judge the facts in the case, but like to say sensational things and so they tell these terrible tales.

I have had an unusually large experience with vaccination. I have vaccinated with my own hands over 15,000 people, and have supervised the vaccination of perhaps 10,000 more. Among all these I have yet to see the first child, man or woman that was injured in the least by it. I have yet to see the first one who even made a semblance of an approach to death or loss of an arm caused by vaccination as is so frequently reported. I have heard all kinds of rumors, but when they were checked up, they had no foundation to them.

Flag Day

SATURDAY, JUNE 14.

Governor Alex J. Groesbeck has proclaimed Saturday, June 14, 1924 as Flag Day, and urges that the flag not only be displayed wherever possible but that communities, schools and other organizations conduct appropriate exercises. It would be good Americanism, too, he says if each motion picture theatre on Flag Day would flash on the screen a picture of the Nation's emblem.

The Speaker.—Dr. Lewis A. Convis.

Dr. Lewis A. Convis, of Chicago, eloquent and widely known speaker, will deliver his masterful address, "An Adventure in Happiness," before the local high school graduation class Thursday evening.

Doctor Convis has traveled in many parts of the world and has mingled with many races of people. He has observed their modes of living, their struggle for happiness and contentment both in days of peace and again when strife and turmoil were rampant.

From his close association with people and from his observations and deductions he has constructed the remarkable address he will give here, one which has been of help and inspiration to thousands.

Doctor Convis is forceful, dynamic, convincing, and a great factor in the lives of young people.

SCOUT WORK PLAN-NED FOR SUMMER

GEO. M. RICHARDS OF SAGINAW ENGAGED FOR INSTRUCTION.

George M. Richards, who has been secured by the Council for playground and Scout work this summer, spent Wednesday afternoon in the city looking over the ground for the summer's work. He was favorably impressed with the progress of the work so far and was enthusiastic with the plans for the future.

Mr. Richards has had some experience in scouting, three years in Saginaw and the last few months in Mt. Pleasant. He wishes to make the announcement:

All boys who are interested in the work, which will include hikes, camping trips and general instructions in playground work and in the rudiments of scouting; all parents who are interested and who wish to have their boys become associated with this movement are requested to register at the Avalanche office.

An announcement will be made later as Mr. Richards will not be here permanently until after the twentieth of the month, and wishes to have everything in readiness to take up the work.

ODDFELLOWS AND REBEKAHS HELD ANNUAL MEMORIAL.

Grayling Lodge I. O. O. F. No. 137 and Grayling Rebekah Lodge No. 352 held their annual memorial services last Sunday and had one of the finest turnouts they have had for some time. At 9:30 o'clock in the morning members of both orders met at the Oddfellow temple, where they formed in line, and headed by the Citizens band marched to Danebod hall.

At Danebod hall, Rev. Baughn delivered the Memorial address, taking for his text Psalm 133:1—Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity—that they may be as one. Then their father art in me and I in thee that they may also be in us that the world may believe that thou didst send me. St. John's 17:21. During the service the choir rendered many beautiful hymns.

On leaving Danebod hall the Oddfellow again formed in line and marched to the cemetery, where the Rebekah ladies rode in autos. The Orders were honored by having Grand Secretary Rogers of Lansing with them on the occasion. At the cemetery the 45 graves of deceased members of both organizations were decorated with flowers, after which the usual ritualistic service was held.

PUBLIC DEBT CUT $350,000,000

New Short Time Loans Carry Lowest Interest Rate Since War.

Washington—Pre-war interest rates appear on government securities with the announcement by the treasury of its June fiscal program. The operation includes an issue of $150,000,000 in certificates of indebtedness and indicates a cut in the public debt of $350,000,000.

The new certificates bear interest of 2.34 per cent, the lowest rate the government has paid in any of its war or post-war financing and probably lower than that of any government during the period since the World war opened in 1914. The issue is dated June 15 and matures next December 15.

No matter how ardently we may believe in the Republican party, we must concede that there will be one other called the Democratic party. Besides these two parties, the history of America has demonstrated that other parties come and go, but these two remain.

HEALTH CENTER TO BE OPEN DAILY.

Special arrangements have been made for keeping open the County Health center each day this summer at from 2:30 to 4:00 p. m. This will be in charge of capable instructors. There will be classes in nutrition and speech defect, and also for the Little Mothers' League.

Already about 50 children have been vaccinated, and last Monday 17 more were added to the list. Next Monday will be the last clinic for vaccination and also for administering the final dose of toxin-anti-toxin. This will be at the Health Center at 9:00 a. m.

Every case of chickenpox must be seen by a physician, according to the State law. Chickenpox so resembles a mild case of smallpox that to ignore it is to invite troubles for the community.

It is a very virulent form of smallpox that is now going the rounds in Detroit and it is getting out in the state. Don't trust to old vaccinations. Ask the doctor; see that you are protected. In all the vaccinations there is no reason for infection if care is used and dressing is taken care of.

Let us try this summer to keep all infection down by guarding the very first case, and let us make Grayling the healthiest town in Michigan, as the locality would favor its being.

CHRISTENING PARTY.

The little ones and the mothers will be interested in the christening party that is to be given at the Health center Saturday afternoon from 2:30 to 4:00 o'clock when the new Health Center baby doll will be christened. This was purchased by the Little Mothers' league, and cost $12.00. It is waterproof and can be bathed. The children learn on this doll how to handle and care for a real baby.

At this party cake and lemonade will be served if the weather is favorable, and if not, cocoa will be served. A small charge will be made and the money will be used for purchasing cloth by the Little Mothers' league for making clothes for the baby. Mothers are specially invited.

The refunds were authorized under the new tax law which reduced this year's income taxes 25 per cent.

THE HIGHGRADER

"A WHOPPER"

SYNOPSIS.—Word that their a party of "high-toned Britishers" recently arrived at the Lodge, among them an army captain and his sister of the same name as himself, is brought to Jack Kilmeny (known to his intimates as Crumbs) and some friends camping on the Gunnison in Colorado. Called to account for the uproar by Dobyns Verinder, snobbish millionaire, member of the British party, Jack sends that individual and has a friendly chat with Moya Dwight, attractive Irish girl. He also meets Joyce Seldon, a famous beauty.

CHAPTER II

Night Fishing

Next day brought Kilmeny the office of camp cook, which was taken in turn by each of the men. Only two meals a day were eaten in camp, so that he had several hours of leisure after the breakfast things were cleared away.

The arrival of the party at the Lodge brought back to him vividly some chapters of his life that had long been buried. His father, Archibald Kilmeny, had married the daughter of a small cattleman some years after he had come to Colorado. Though she had died while he was a child, Jack still held warmly in his heart some vivid memories of the passionate unscrubbed woman who had been his mother.

She had been a belle in the cow country, charming in her way, beautiful to the day of her death, but without education or restraint. Her husband had made the mistake of taking her back to Ireland on a visit to his people. The result had been unfortunate. She was unconquerably provincial, entirely democratic, as unscrubbed as her native colubine. Moreover, her temper was of the whirlwind variety. The staid life of the old country, with its well-ordered distinctions of class and rutted conventions, did not suit her at all. All traditions which she could not understand the young wife scoffed openly. Before she left, velle dislike became almost open war. The visit had never been repeated, nor, indeed, had she ever been invited again. This she had bitterly resented and she had instilled into Jack the antagonism she herself felt. When he was eight years old Jack's father had insisted on taking him back to meet his relatives. Immediately upon his return the youngster's mother had set about undermining any fondness he might have felt for his British kindred. Three years later she had died.

She had been a devoted mother, with fierce gusts of passionate adoration for her boy. Jack remembered these after he forgot her less amiable qualities. He had grown up with an unreasonable feeling of dislike toward those of his father's family who had failed to get along with her. Some instinct of loyalty which he could hardly define set him unconsciously in antagonism to his cousins at the Lodge. He had decided not to make himself known to them. In a few days their paths would diverge again for all time.

Dusk found him in the river just above the riffles. He fished down the stream slowly, shortening his line as darkness settled over the hills.

He was nearly opposite the Lodge when he noticed a fisherman in front of him. Working steadily forward, Kilmeny found himself gaining on the other. In order not to pass too near he struck out into the deeper water toward the center of the river. When almost opposite the other he heard a splash not twenty feet away, followed by the whirl of the reel as the trout made for the deep water. From the shadows where his unknown companion was obscured came the click of the line being wound up. There was a flash of silver in the moonlight, and again the rapid whirl of the reel.

"You've hooked a whale, neighbor," Kilmeny called across.

The voice that came back to him across the water was eager and glad. Jack would have known its throat of youthful zest among a thousand. "Must I let him have all the line he wants?"

Kilmeny waded toward her as he gave counsel. "Don't make it too easy for him, but don't jerk. Keep his nose up if you can."

The trout fought gamely and strongly, but the young woman stuck to her work and would not give him any rest. Jack watched her carefully. He saw that she was tiring, but he did not offer any help, for he knew that she was a sportsman. She would want to win alone or not at all.

Yet he moved closer. The water was up to her hips, and no river in the Rockies has a swifter current than the Gunnison. The bottom, too, is covered with smooth slippery stones and boulders, so that a mistep might send her plunging down. Deprived of the use of her landing pole, she could make less resistance to the tug of the stream, and the four or five pounds of dynamic energy at the end of her line would give her all she could do to take care of for the next few minutes. Her pole was braced against her body, which made reeling difficult. The man beside her observed that except for a tendency to raise the pole too much she was playing her trout like a veteran.

The thing that he had anticipated happened. Her foot slipped from its insecure rock hold and she stumbled. His arm was round her waist in an instant.

"Steady! Take your time."

"Thanks. I'm all right now."

His right arm still gripped her slight figure. The trout was tiring. Inch by inch she brought him nearer. Presently she panted, "My landing net."

It was caught in the creel. Kilmeny unfasted the net and brought it round where it would be ready for instant use.

"Tell me what I must do now."

"He's hooked pretty fast. Take your time about getting him into your net, and be careful then. These big fellows are likely to squirm away."

It was a ticklish moment when she let go of the rod with her left hand to slip the net under the trout, but she negotiated it in safety.

"Isn't he a whopper?" she cried in delight. "He won't go into the creel at all."

"Then let me have him. The glory is yours. I'll be your gillie to carry the game bag."

He got his fingers through its gill before he took the hook from the mouth of the fish. Carrying the trout in one hand and his pole in the other, he waded slowly through the swift water to the shore.

The girl's vibrant voice came to him as she splashed at his heels toward the bank. "He's such a ripping good one. I'm so pleased. How much do you think he will weigh?"

"My guess is six pounds. He's the biggest taken this year so far. I congratulate you, Miss Dwight."

"I would never have got him if you hadn't been there to help me with advice. But I really did it all myself. Didn't I? If you had touched the rod before I had him netted I'd never have forgiven you," she confessed, eyes glowing with the joy of her achievement.

"It's no joke to land one of these big fellows. I saw you were tired. But it's the sporting thing to play your own fish."

Her dark eyes flashed a questioning glance at him. She had been brought up in a society where class lines were closely drawn, but her experience gave her no data for judging this young man's social standing. Casual inquiries of old Ballard, the caretaker at the Lodge, had brought her the information that the party of fishermen were miners from the hills. This young man's social standing. Casual inquiries of old Ballard, the caretaker at the Lodge, had brought her the information that the party of fishermen were miners from the hills.

He went by the name of Crumbs and sometimes Jack. What puzzled Miss Dwight was the difficulty of reconciling him with himself. Sometimes he used the speech and the slow drawl of the platoonman, and again he spoke with the correctness of one who has known good society. In spite of his careless garb he had the look of class.

A young woman of impulse, she yielded to an audacious one now. "I'm glad you let me do the sporting thing, Mr.—Crumbs."

His gentle laughter welled out. "Where did you get that?"

"Isn't it your name?" she asked, with a lift of the dark eyebrows.

He hesitated, barely an instant. Of course she knew perfectly well that it was not his name. But it suited him not to give one more definite.

"I reckon it's a name good enough to bring me to dinner by," he drawled, smiling.

He was back again in the western idiom and manner. She wondered why. The change had come when she had spoken his name. A certain wariness had settled over his face, like a mask. She could see that he was purposely taking refuge in the class distinctions that presumably separated them. Yet she could have sworn that nothing had been farther from his mind during the exciting ten minutes in the water while voice and presence and arm had steadied her for the battle.

They walked together up the slope to the big house. A fishing costume is not a thing of grace, but the one this girl wore could not eclipse the elastic suppleness of the slender figure or the joy in life that animated the vivid face with the black curls straying from beneath the jaunty cap. To deny her beauty was easy, but in the soft slanted moonlight showered through the trees it was impossible for Kilmeny's eyes to refuse her an admission of charm. She had the gift of comradeship, and with it a freedom of mind unusual in one of her class.

She ran up the steps of the Lodge lightly and thanked him with a pleasant "good-night." As he turned away Kilmeny came face to face with another fisherman, returning from the sport of the night. The man opposite him was rather short and thickset. In his eyes was a look of kind shrewd wisdom. Iced-faced and white-bearded, he was unmistakably an Englishman of the upper class.

Miss Dwight introduced him as Lord Farquhar, and the men shook hands.

"Guess what I've got," demanded the young woman, her hands behind her.

"Heaven only knows. It might be anything from the measles to a new lover," smiled Farquhar.

She flashed upon him the fish that had been hidden behind her waders. "By Jove! Catch him yourself!"

She nodded, her eyes shining.

Farquhar, very much a sportsman, wanted to know all about it, after which he insisted on weighing the trout. Jack was dragged into the Lodge to join in this function, and presently found himself meeting Lady Farquhar, a pleasant plump lady. Her smile was warm for this supple blue-eyed engaging westerner, but the latter did not need to be told that behind her friendliness the instinct of the chaperon was alert. The one swift glance she had thrown at Miss Dwight told him as much.

Into the room drifted presently Miss Seldon, a late novel in her hand. Joyce Seldon was frankly a beauty in every line and feature. Her exquisite coloring, the soft amber hair so extravagant in quantity, the long lashes which shaded deep lovely eyes, satisfied the senses no less than the supple rounded young body which was carried with such light grace. Kilmeny was not very impressionable, but in her presence the world seemed somehow shot through with a new radiance. She laid upon him the spell of women.

Presently Dobyns Verinder dropped in with an empty creel and opened wide supercilious eyes at sight of Jack. He was followed presently by Captain Kilmeny and his sister, India, the latter a pretty Irish girl, quick of tongue, quicker of eye, and ready for anything from flirting to fishing.

From the talk, Jack gathered that Lord Farquhar and Miss Dwight had bet their catch would outweigh that of the other three, Farquhar and she to fish opposite the Lodge and the others half a mile below. The minority party had won easily, thanks to the big trout and Verinder's obstinacy in sticking to the flies he had used in England with success. There is a type of Englishman that goes through life using the flies he was brought up on and trying to make them fit all places and times. Any divergence is a form of treason. Neither Farquhar nor Kilmeny happened to be of that kind.

Supper, to which Lady Farquhar had insisted that the Americans stay, was being served informally in the living room. Verinder helped himself to a sandwich, ogling Moya the while with his eyes.

"I say, you know, I believe in you, Miss Dwight," he asserted.

That young woman did not know why she resented more than usual his wheedling attentions. Lady Jim had invited the millionaire to join their party as the girl very well knew. In order to give her charges a chance at him. Not that Lady Farquhar liked the man. She knew him quite well for an ill-bred little snob at heart. But he would pass muster in a crowd, and none of the young women of the party could afford to sniff at two millions sterling.

Since Captain Kilmeny had joined the party in Denver the plans of Lady Farquhar had been modified. The soldier had taken an early opportunity to tell her that he meant to ask Moya Dwight to marry him. He had been in love with her for years and had asked her just before his regiment left for India the last time. The captain was not rich, but he had enough. It happened too that he was a clean honest gentleman who had made a reputation for efficiency and gallantry in the army. Lady Farquhar was quite willing to back his suit so far as she could.

"He's our kind, Ned Kilmeny is," she had told her husband. "I gave Moya her chance with Verinder but I should have been disappointed in her if she had taken him. If she will only fall in love with Ned I'll forgive her all the queer things she is always doing."

Farquhar had chuckled. "It's an odds-on chance she'll not fancy him, Di."

"No, I suppose not. Pity she can't be sensible."

"There are enough of us sensible, Di. We can spare her a few years yet for romance. When she grows sensible she'll have to give up something she can't afford to lose."

His wife looked at him and smiled fondly. "You haven't quite lost it yourself, Jim."

It was true enough that Lord Farquhar retained an interest in life that was refreshing. This evening his eyes gleamed while the westerner told of the frontier day program to be held at the little town of Gunnison next day.

"You and your friends are miners, I understand. You'll not take part, then?" he asked.

"I used to punch cows. My name is entered for the riding. The boys want me to take a turn."

India Kilmeny sat up straight. "Let's go. We can ride up in the morning. It will be jolly. All in favor of going eat another sandwich."

"It will be pretty woolly—quite different from anything you have seen," the miner suggested.

"Thought we came to fish," Verinder interposed. "Great bore looking at amateur shows and it's a long ride."

"Move we go. What say, Lady Farquhar?" put in Captain Kilmeny.

"Do let's go," Moya begged.

"I don't see why we shouldn't," Lady Farquhar smiled. "But I'm like Mr. Verinder about riding. If he'll drive me up the rest of you can go on horseback."

"Delighted, m' sure."

Verinder came to time outwardly civil but inwardly fuming.

"If we're going it's time you girls were in bed. You've had a hard day and tomorrow will be another," Lady Jim pronounced.

The westerner rose to go.

"Night's young yet. Stop and sit in with us to a game of poker. What?" Farquhar invited.

"My pocketbook is at the camp," the American demurred.

"I'll be your banker," his host volunteered.

The ladies said good-night and departed. Chairs were drawn to the card table, chips sold, and hands were dealt. The light of morning was breaking before Kilmeny made his way back to camp. He had in his pockets one hundred and seventy-three dollars, most of which had recently been the property of Dobyns Verinder.

CHAPTER III

Fugitives From Justice

At the Lodge the whole party was down by nine-thirty and was on the road within the hour. The horses were keen and the pace brisk. It was not until half the distance had been covered that Joyce, who was riding beside the captain, found opportunity for conversation.

"You sat up late, didn't you?"

"Early," the soldier laughed.

"How did the savage behave himself? He has a good deal of assurance, hasn't he?" she asked lightly.

The captain hesitated. "Do you think that's quite the word? He dived in easily—wasn't shy or awkward—that sort of thing, you know—but he wasn't obtrusive at all. Farquhar likes him."

"He's rather interesting," Joyce admitted.

She thought of him as a handsome untamed young barbarian, but it was impossible for her to deny a certain amount of regard for any villain man who admired her. The westerner had not let his eyes rest often upon her, but the subtle instinct of her sex told her that he was very much taken with her. Since Joyce Seldon was the center and circumference about which most of her thoughts revolved, it followed that the young man had chosen the sure way to her favor.

Moya Dwight too found that the young fisherman flitted in and out of her mind a good deal. In spite of the soft vocal elisions of the West, his speech had a dignity that suggested breeding. It was quite likely he was not a gentleman, according to the code, in which she had been brought up, but it was equally sure there burned in him that dynamic spark of self-respect which is at the base of all good manners.

The little town of Gunnison rioted with life. Born and brought up as she had been in the iron caste of modern super-civilization, Moya found the barbaric color of the occasion very appealing. As she looked down on the arena from the box her party occupied, the heart of the girl throbbed with the pure joy of it all. She loved this West, with its picturesque chap-clad brown-faced riders. They were a hard bitten lot, turned to a brick red by the untempered sun of the Rockies. Cheerful sons of mirth they were, carrying their years with a boyish exuberance that was delightful.

Most of the competitors for the bucking broncho championship had been eliminated before the arrival of the party from the Lodge. Among the three who had reached the finals was their guest of the previous evening.

"Jack Kilmeny will ride Teddy Roosevelt," blared the megaphone man.

The English officer turned to Farquhar. "Didn't quite catch the name. Sounded like my own."

"That's what I thought," contributed his sister. "A moment later, she added: 'Why, it's Mr. Crumbs.'"

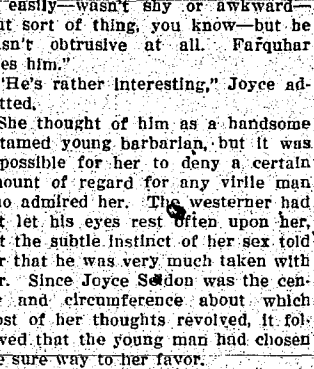

That young man snatched forward lazily, dragging his saddle by its horn. He saddled the trembling animal warily, then swung lightly to the seat. The broncho stood for an instant motionless, then humped itself from the earth, an incarnate demon of action. But he bucked only a moment, and then he was pinned to the saddle. Little and sinuous as a panther, he rode with a perfect ease that was captivating. Even the frontier West had never seen a more daring and magnificent piece of horsemanship.

Captain Kilmeny clapped his hands enthusiastically. "Bravo! Well done!" He turned to Moya, who sat beside him. "Finest bit of rough-riding I ever saw. Not one man in a million could have done it."

"It's all in getting the hang of the thing, you know," drawled Verinder complacently.

Moya, who was leaning forward with her dark eyes fixed on the two superb animals fighting for mastery in the arena, thought both comments characteristic. The captain was a sportsman and a gentleman, the millionaire was neither.

India whispered in the ear of Moya. "He's as broadminded as a crab, just about."

The Bucks of the Pony Were Easy to Foresee.

ergy and spirit of Teddy Roosevelt. The unanimous decision of the judges was in favor of Kilmeny. But when they sought for him to award the prize the new champion was nowhere to be found.

Moya Dwight felt with genuine disappointment that the man's courtesy had failed. She and her friends had applauded his exploits liberally. The least he could have done would have been to have made a short call at their box. Instead, he had ignored them. She resolved to bear herself more coldly if they met again.

The early shadows of sunset were stretching down the rough mountain sides by the time the visitors from the Lodge reached the river canyon on their homeward way. Soon after this the champion rider and his friend Colter passed them on a stretch of narrow road cut in the steep wall of the gulch. The leathery face of the latter took them in impassively as he gave them a little nod of recognition, but the younger man reined in for a few words. He accepted their congratulations with a quiet "Glad you enjoyed it," but it was plain that he was in a hurry. In his eyes there was a certain hard wariness that seemed hardly to fit the occasion. Moya could not avoid the impression that he was anxious about something. As soon as he could he put spurs to his horse and cantered after his companion.

It was perhaps a quarter of an hour later that the sound of hard riding reached them from the rear. Five dusty, hard-bitten men, all armed with rifles and revolvers, drew level with them. The leader threw a crisp question at Lord Farquhar.

"Two riders pass you lately?"

"Yes."

"Say anything?"

"The younger one stopped for a few words. He is a Mr. Crumbs, camped on the river just below us."

It took as if Jack might be in bad. The five hard-bitten riders strongly suggest a sheriff's posse—bent on business. Will they catch him?

Chess Tournament No Place for "Rooters"

Chess is one game, or sport, where the rooster is conspicuous by his absence. The stickler for golf etiquette, who frowns if a robin chirps while some one is attempting to putt, would be considered a noisy nuisance at a chess tournament. A gallery of silent spectators may stand at a respectful distance from two masters of the game, but these of the gallery must keep quiet. If an important move is made—one that appears to have peculiar significance in regard to the outcome of the contest—there must be no cheering. Even nodding approval is barred if the nod will cause the collar to rattle.

Chess masters regard their pieces by the hour. Minutes will pass while all of the possibilities and eventualities are considered from every angle. There must be absolute quiet, for chess is a game for thinkers, and thinkers cannot be disturbed without serious consequences to their train of thought. The escaping of a sigh seems as loud as the exhaust of a locomotive. The dropping of a pin would be regarded as an outright violation of the code of ethics. Chess is a game where concentration rises to sublime heights and where silence is obligatory if not golden. Municipal authorities who have established quiet zones and then been at a loss to know how to maintain them in them might learn something from a chess tournament. Place a group of chess players in each zone. —Washington Star.

The Personal Touch

"One of the oddest things about my business," said the clerk in the hat department, "is to see how men behave when they are buying a new 'kelly.' No, I don't know why a hat is called a 'kelly.' I have never had a customer upon whose head I put a hat who didn't touch it immediately after I had stepped back to see the effect of the new bit, and get a hint on whether the particular style was becoming. It seems that a man gets into the habit of having his hat rest upon his head in just one way, and he doesn't feel comfortable unless it does, and he is the only one who knows the correct way to place it. Try it sometime. Place a man's hat upon his head and see if he can refrain from giving it an extra touch. I'll venture the assertion that he can't."

Most excuses are not worth the making.

Concrete Pavements Grow Stronger Year After Year

When you vote for a paved road or street, you want to know that you won't be called upon for assessments every now and then to repair or rebuild it.

Built according to present-day high standards, Concrete roads and streets permanently withstand the heaviest pounding and grinding of modern traffic. In fact, they grow stronger year after year.

That is because their definitely proportioned mixture of sand, pebbles or broken stone, and water, is held together by the everlasting grip of that tenacious binder, portland cement.

Concrete Pavements have the repair built out and the maintenance built in. That is why they pay you handsome dividends in satisfaction and service.

Firm, rigid, unyielding, and the last word in paving economy, Concrete Roads and Streets are also skid-proof. And their color is a pleasing, light gray—an other very important advantage, especially for night driving.

Watch for advertisements telling about the many other uses of concrete. And remember that the Portland Cement Association has a free personal service to offer you. Whether you use concrete or have it used for you, this service will give you more for your money.

Our booklets R-3 and R-4 tell many interesting things about Concrete Roads and Streets. Which one would you like us to send? There is no charge.

Belgium Didn't Think Much of Bonapartes

A descendant of the illustrious family of Bonaparte, Miss Blanche Sterleight, is selling motorcars to "prospects" in New York. Miss Sterleight is a daughter of Mrs. Jerome Bonaparte. The latter's husband was a grandson of Joseph, brother of the great Corsican himself. Joseph was Napoleon's right hand in the critical days of the consulate. He it was who rushed the grenadiers to the chamber of deputies during the revolution when his brother was answering charges of extravagance in his campaign in Egypt and Italy. Later Joseph was awarded the throne of Spain. An old Flemish rhyme has it that Napoleon was "a butcher of men."

Louis (King of Holland) "always broke his promises," Jerome (King of Westphalia) "dealt in ham" and Joseph was the "tyrant of Spain."

A Logical Child

Elfie—Why hasn't daddy much hair?
Mother—Because he thinks a lot, darling.

Elfie—But why have you got such a lot, mummy?
Mother—Get on with your breakfast. —London Answers.

Two riders pass you lately?
"Yes."

Say anything?
"The younger one stopped for a few words. He is a Mr. Crumbs, camped on the river just below us."

Counted, That's All

An old Cornish granter was asked what he did when he bowed his head in church so reverently just before the service began.

"Well," replied the old man, "that's a fair question an' I'll gie 'ee a fair answer—I 'daren't know what other folk dus, but I 'du always count vorty myself!" —Glasgow Herald.

Many protest that they are democratic, though they like to be told they are aristocratic.

Appalling Problem Confronts Americans, Life Tables Show

Average health span extends only from age 18 to age 31—Earning power dwindles rapidly after 40

Health—physical freedom and full vigor—ends at age 31 for the average person. Maximal usefulness ends at 40. These facts, shown by the United States Life Tables, 1920, form the most appalling problem every human being has to face!

What are the years after 40 going to mean to you? Will they be worth living? Can you earn your way during those years?

Not if you are "the average individual." What sort of person is "the average individual" in America? He works hard. He eats unwisely. He loads his body with drug stimulants, which appear to give energy, but actually borrow this energy from his own reserves.

Age 31—and he begins to slip. The reserve strength which his body sought to store up against these later years, has bit by bit been robbed. Age 40—he suffers loss of income. Age 60—what?

Remember the simple laws of health which everyone learned in school. Avoid stimulants. Avoid the sleepless hours, upset digestion, warning headaches, taut nerves and muddy complexions which so often accompany the use of the drug caffeine.

Caffein is classified as a poison. Like strychnin, it is sometimes given by doctors in cases of heart failure. The average cup of coffee contains the usual dose of caffeine administered in such cases. The alarming foolishness of taking this poison regularly into the system is borne out by the frightful limitation of health and usefulness as compared with the length of life.

You need the digestive aid and comfort of a hot drink. You can get such a drink without drugs. You can get it with a flavor which millions of people consider more delicious than any other. You can get it in a form which contributes, rather than robs, reserve strength.

Change to Postum! Whole wheat and bran, skillfully roasted, with a little sweetening. Nothing more. A wholesome drink—an enjoyable drink. Try Postum for thirty days—you can't rid yourself of the effects of a habit of years in a few days.

We will start you on your thirty-day test, with a week's supply of Postum—free. Either Postum Cereal (the kind you boil) or Instant Postum, the easiest drink in the world to prepare. Either kind costs less than most other hot drinks. Just indicate the kind you want for your week's free supply—and we will also have Carrie Blanchard, famous for the goodness of her Postum, send you her own directions.

Are you interested in the years after 40? Accept this offer now!

Seven Points of Supremacy

1. The sole leather used in "FOOT-FITTERS" is of the best quality obtainable. The insoles are cut from standard outsole leather.
2. "FOOT-FITTERS" are the only shoes in the world having full length vamp and sole leather box toes. This feature prevents ripping at the tip and makes a smooth outer and inner surface.
3. The insoles are shoulder channelled so that they fit tightly against the sole. There is no need or room for a cork filler. A small piece of duck is used to prevent squeaking.
4. The California inside counter pocket is of great value, for it saves the wear on the socks. There is no rough surface to rub against.
5. "FOOT-FITTER" heels are 1/4-inch longer than generally used. They give additional support to the arch and increase the comfort and wear of the shoe.
6. The vamp is reinforced with 8-oz. duck. This absorbs the moisture from the foot, this keeps the vamp from cracking and holds the shoe in shape.
7. Edmonds' "FOOT-FITTER" shoes are called "FOOT-FITTERS" because they fit the foot snugly. Built on combination lasts they support the foot like a doctor's bandage. "FOOT-FITTERS" give Comfort, Service and Appearance.

EDMOND'S = FOOTFITTERS

Claud Gilson and a friend were fishing trout about thirty miles below Riverview on the Manistee river last week and had a fine catch. Claud reports nine steelhead trout weighing between five and six pounds each. The largest one measured 27 inches long. He says he lost a number of trout that were larger and believes some of them would weigh as high as nine to ten pounds. Six of these he landed in one day, besides many others over 20 inches long. That was some catch and one that would be thrilling enough to last one a whole season. The water where they were was deep and swift and at times he was drenched wet, when some big fellow would drag him thru a deep hole, and at times it was necessary to swim to keep from drowning. A number of pictures were taken while in the act of landing a trout, showing them leaping into the air in their effort to get rid of the hook.

FACTS YOU MAY NOT KNOW

Women are responsible for men's vanity. The use of motor vehicles is constantly growing in Algeria. Yes, Lester, one-half of a man's energy is wasted. Only the down strokes count in chopping wood. Arsenic has been found in appreciable quantities in all organs of the human body. Increasing in amount with the age of the person examined.

Don't think that an apology always wipes out the offense. Why does the average splinter know so much about rearing children? The low price of native labor in China has prevented the adoption of gasoline motors. Few of us are so vain as not to claim to be of the great common people, though we feel that we're not too common, at that.

BIG GASOLINE FIRE

A spark, believed to have been generated by the scraping of a lid on a tank car, started this fire in which six men were burned—two fatally—more than a million gallons of gasoline destroyed, and damage of half a million dollars done to the storage plant of the Craig Oil and Refining company at St. Paul, Minn. One of the tanks is seen exploding.

SEEK LOST CURRENT

Somewhere in the North Atlantic ocean something has happened to the Arctic current. The United States coast guard has sent Lieut. Edward H. Smith (shown above in uniform) who is one of the foremost experts in oceanography, to solve the puzzle. The temperature of a whole section of the ocean has raised 7 degrees, and the usual several hundred icebergs sent at this time of year has dwindled to less than a dozen. Lieutenant Smith is shown taking the sea's temperature.

Animals are kept on the roofs of the houses in Lima, Peru, and it frequently happens that a cow passes her whole life on a roof, being taken there as a calf and brought down finally as fresh beef.

The DAIRY

BETTER COWS QUITE ESSENTIAL IN DAIRY

Dr. David Friday, formerly president of the Michigan State Agricultural college, recently pointed out a fact that is well known, but, like lots of well-known facts, seldom appreciated. The scrub dairyman gets 120,000 pounds of milk a year from 40 cows averaging 3,000 pounds each. He would be better off with 30 averaging 4,000 pounds each because he would get the same milk check with one-fourth less work and overhead. The better dairyman uses 15 cows producing 8,000 pounds each to get his milk check, while the really successful dairyman gets 120,000 pounds of milk from 12 cows averaging 10,000 pounds a year.

While the successful dairyman gets his 120,000 pounds from 12 cows instead of 40, thus cutting his overhead, labor and feed cost by nearly three-fourths, he has an added advantage which has recently been proved by the United States dairy division. The dairy division finds that cows producing 100 pounds of fat in a year made an average return above feed cost of $10 each. Cows producing 400 pounds of fat in a year made an average return above feed cost of $106. Thus it seems that it only took four times as great production to make the cow ten times more profitable.

With these figures in mind it is very easy to see why there are failures in the dairy business and why, also, there are such marked successes.

The way to get and keep a profitable herd is to everlastingly weed out the culls, employ better methods by keeping up to date on the new feeds and methods that make greater profit and, lastly but by no means least, to use good, straight pure bred dairy bulls with production records back of them.

Test Cream Separators, Is Advice of Expert

Cream separators that have not been tested for some time may be cheating their owners out of a considerable sum every week. That can be avoided, for skim milk testing will reveal the honesty of the most deceitful separator, according to C. A. Iverson of the Iowa state college.

"Surprising results have been obtained wherever fairly large numbers of hand separators have been tested," Mr. Iverson says. "In Worth county, five separators in one cow-testing association were found to be losing excessive amount of butterfat. We feel certain that there are many separators in every community that are losing butterfat for their owners. An annual loss of several dollars can easily result if the machine is not regulated or run properly."

Skim milk testing can be done by the Babcock method with a special double-necked test bottle. In place of the 17.5 cubic centimeters of acid required for whole milk, 20 are used for skim milk. Otherwise, practically the same procedure is followed as in testing whole milk. The test can be made by the farmers themselves, or, if this is not convenient, by the local creamery.

Making Better Butter

Whether the product is made at home or at the creamery, matters little, cream should be clean flavored to make good butter. To obtain practically all of the cream from the milk and have it in the best shape for butter making requires the use of a good cream separator. Further, the thorough cleaning and sterilizing of all dairy utensils is essential to the production of a product having a good flavor.

Aid Dairy Community

There are two means by which the dairy cow population of a community may be increased, by breeding through the use of pure bred bulls from proved ancestry, and by importing from other sections mature cows ready for service at the fall. In the latter case of purchase of cows, we have two alternatives—importing animals from other sections, and finding the animals within the state.

Creamery Activities

Buying activities of 308 creameries indicate that 29 per cent of the organization buy feeds, 25 per cent buy containers, and 22 per cent buy fuel. The complete list of commodities purchased by the various organizations include: building material, fencing, hardware, implements, general merchandise, and miscellaneous products in addition to the commodities specifically enumerated.

Cream Needs Good Care

As hot weather approaches the cream must receive better care on the average farm. As soon after separating as possible, cool the cream by setting the can in cold water. Never mix the fresh cream with the cream from previous separation until cooled as low as possible. Do not keep cream too long at the farm. Poor stale cream will not make good butter. If the creamery cannot make good butter the average price of cream will be lower than if good butter can be made.

Source of Succulence

The dairyman needs a permanent source of succulence for summer feeding. Relying on blue grass pastures is often unsafe because dry spells soon burn them up. Such dry spells cause the cows to drop in milk production.

Sweet clover offers an excellent pasture value to the dairyman. Sweet clover, preferably the white variety, stands up under drouth conditions, grows abundantly, and does not cause bloat.
